Revision Timetable (Non-School Day)

How to set up my 'Revision Timetable'

- Your timetable needs to be realistic and workable.
- Preparing and sticking to a proper revision schedule is crucial. This not only guarantees you cover the subjects you want to before each exam, but it also breaks everything down into more manageable pieces.
- Rule out days and timeslots that you know you will not be able to revise e.g. family events, training, etc.
- Stick to only one or two slots i.e. morning and afternoon.

On a 'Non-School Day':

- You need to aim to do 8 revision sessions a day.
- There a total of 5 weekends (and one Bank Holiday Monday) before half term. This is a total of 11 days.
- There are a further 9 days over half-term, including weekends.
- There are a further 17 days after half-term before the final exam.
- This would mean you could cover close to 300 revision sessions in preparation for your exams in total.
- This would roughly equate to around 30 revision sessions per subject.
- Look at your exam timetable work back from each exam and plan out how many sessions you are going to dedicate to each subject then populate the boxes where you are going to aim to revise.

Summary

- Each session lasts 30 minutes with a 5 minute break to keep revision fresh.
- You can do double sessions (60 minutes) for subjects that require longer answers.
- Tick off what you are doing (last page). You will feel good when you look back at the work you have done (avoids the feeling of "I haven't done enough").
- It sounds obvious, but make sure you're drinking enough water and eating regular meals it can be tempting to eat at your desk to maximise study time, but you'll work more effectively if you use meal times as a way to get away from your study space.
- Remember that everybody has different study patterns and energy levels, so try not to worry that you're not doing enough work that is why we have a timetable!
- If you find you cannot stick to a session don't be hard on yourself, just move it to a different empty box!

YOU CAN DO THIS!
